Television puts foot in Y's arena

It would be too many seconds wasted on Cosmo the Cougar. BYU's lovable mascot was supposed to be introduced before the team's starting five at the Marriott Center Monday night in the game between BYU and the University of Utah.

Before?

But the man crouched in a van outside the arena said that would be unacceptable.

"I don't want the mascot to be introduced first. We need the team to come first with the music," said ESPN producer Jeff Kibler, dressed in black and a headset. Kibler sat in front of more than 20 televisions with his crew, shuttled from San Francisco over the weekend.

They were covering Big Monday, which featured the rivalry between BYU and the University of Utah.

ESPN holds a seven-year contract with BYU and the Mountain West Conference, and they dictate many details of the BYU football and men's basketball games, including game schedules, play times, and those other little staging strategies.

"We need the starters nearest to the half court in the order they are introduced," Kibler said, the clock reading 22 minutes until game time — or show time, depending on who you ask.

For the past 20 years, some believe collegiate sports have in many ways become more tailored for the television screen than the faithful fan.

"College sports are largely driven by television now," said Mikel Minor, Executive Producer for Sports West, a division of KSL broadcasting.

For the second time in two weeks, students and families cheered for BYU well into the midnight hour. While many fans left their kids for the babysitter and others stayed home altogether, most didn't seem to mind the late game. Big Monday is ESPN's college basketball version of Monday Night Football. It also seems to represent the growing influence of television in college sports. The schools once made all the decisions about when and where their games would be played. But that has changed.

"Television really got its thrust in college athletics with the anti-

Spectators at the BYU basketball game Monday night stay awake despite the late hour. A contract with BYU and the Mountain West Conference allows ESPN to dictate many of the details for the basketball games, including when they begin.

Napster to charge fees for services

Associated Press

DAVOS, Switzerland — Internet music business Napster Inc. plans to start charging subscription fees by June or July of this year, Bertelsmann AG chairman Thomas Middelhoff said.

"We carried out market research among 20,000 Napster users. The willingness to pay is given," the head of the Germany media company said Monday during the World Economic Forum.

Bertelsmann, the parent company of the BMG music unit, signed a watershed cooperation deal with Napster in October. It's trying to bring the Internet music site together with other players in the industry in an effort to legitimatize the popular Web site.

Earlier this month, independent record label TVT Records announced it was dropping its lawsuit against Napster, becoming the second such record label to do so after Bertelsmann itself.

However, much of the world's recording industry remains at loggerheads with Napster, a Web site that allows registered users to swap music files free of charge. The industry says the Napster model is a breach of copyright and results in a loss of royalties for the artists and the recording companies.

By changing to subscriptions, Napster runs the risk of losing its users to other online companies that continue to provide music exchange at no charge.

Napster is in talks to enlist other record companies, including Sony, EMI Group, Warner Music and Universal.

The Redwood, California-based Napster claims millions of users, including 1.6 million users online at any one time.

Analyst Eric Scheirer of Cambridge, Mass.-based Forrester Research said the plan had potential, but a few things need to be worked out first.

"There are people that are ready to pay out there," Scheirer said.

Titles from all labels would need to be included among the selections to make the move a success, he said.

"Music fans really want the opportunity to choose from the entire body of recorded music," Scheirer said. "If we want to raise the price we're going to have to raise the opportunity."

Dance revisions clarified

By Burke Olsen

Paul Warner of the Provo City Council says that proposed revisions to the city's dance hall ordinance will not affect private dances and will impact relatively few other parties.

"The only thing we want to do is make sure that if people go to public dances there are some safety standards," Warner said.

The changes do not impact students who want to have parties in their apartments or neighborhood events conducted by individuals or housing complexes, provided that the general public is not invited Warner said.

While such parties are not limited by city ordinances, other factors may induce police involvement. Noise level, public nuisance and parking violations are the most common reasons police break up private dances and parties, Warner said.

The City Council voted 5 to 2 on Jan. 16 to generally support revisions suggested by city attorneys, to the current dance hall code. Since then a few minor changes in wording have been made to the proposed revisions. A final vote will be held at the City Council meeting on Feb. 6.

The ordinance will continue to require "dance halls" and "public dances" to obtain licenses from the city. The revised ordinance describes a public dance as any place or space open to the general public where there is dancing, whether there is a charge for admission or not. Permanent dance halls, like Club Omni, are charged a licensing fee of $75 annually. For public dances there is a $75 fee charged for each event.

The proposed revisions would add requirements for metal detectors and at least one video surveillance camera at dance halls and public dances.

They would also require one state certified security guard for every hundred people on the premises.

Controversy and confusion have clouded the issue so far, resulting in strong feelings expressed by some students.

Suvi Hynynen, 20, an international studies major from Medfield, Mass., said she believes the City Council has forgotten to consider some important circumstances.

"I am especially concerned about how this impacts benefits, fund-raisers and concerts," Hynynen said.

She said she wonders why dance parties have been included in the revisions when there have been no problems at them in the past.

"We are ahead of the game. We don't want to always be putting fires out," Warner said.

"We are in no way trying to be anything but helpful," Warner said.

"We just want to see that dances are safe a free from drugs and weapons."

Though Club Omni is the only dance hall that would be immediately affected if the ordinance passes, there are several individual dance companies that would have to comply, Warner said.

Revisions to the ordinance exempt schools, government and church groups from the security requirements, unless they rent their space to other groups.

Correction

A story in the Monday issue of The Daily Universe about Provo dances contained incorrect information. If passed, revisions to the Provo City dance hall ordinance will not require students who have private dance parties to obtain a license or install metal detectors and video surveillance equipment. Under the proposed revisions, such requirements would only be made if the dance becomes public in nature. The Daily Universe regrets the error.

Student Loan Default Rates for Utah Schools, Fiscal Year 1998

When it comes to paying off student loans, BYU students surpass the national average, according to Student Aid News.

Student Aid News said of all universities with 1,500 borrowers or more, BYU has the third lowest default rate.

BYU's 1998 cohort default rate was .8 percent. Falling in third place to Stanford University with a rate of .65 percent, and the University of North Dakota with the rate of .71 percent, according to Student Aid News.

"We have a great student body that is committed to paying off their loans," said Norm Finlinson, director of BYU Financial Aid.

A student receiving a federal loan has a period of six months from the time they leave school to the time they must begin payment on their student loan.

If students fail to make payments within 270 days of that six-month grace period, their loan falls into default, said Steve Olsen, a BYU financial aid attorney.

Clinton and his staff have credited the low national default rate of 6.9 percent to the "robust economy, strong department management, and tougher enforcement tools."

However, Finlinson said the nature of BYU's student body, not measures taken by Clinton's administration, lend itself to the university's low default rate.

Statistics from the Department of Education show that default rates at BYU have decreased in recent years.

According to the department's statistics, BYU's default rate has fallen from 1.6 percent in 1997, to .8 percent in 1998.

Finlinson credits this decline not only to committed students, but also to the incentives offered by the Financial Aid Office.

Three years ago, BYU's Financial Aid Office began sponsoring a program called, "The Financial Path To Graduation," Finlinson said.

This program is a seven-step planning process that students must undergo before they are certified for a long-term loan.

"The planning program gives students a sense of how much they can afford to borrow, and how much they will have to repay," Finlinson said.

Low default rates, according to Finlinson, are partly a result of this new planning process.

The Department of Education statistics show default rates at BYU as being significantly lower then rates at nearby universities and colleges.

Creativity in financing education is Finlinson's advice to students. "Don't automatically defer to loans," he said.

On many occasions the LDS church has suggested the avoidance of debt.

"Our pioneer forefathers have left us a heritage of thrift, of saving, of freedom form debt. Surely they would counsel us today: 'Pay thy debt, and live,'" President Ezra Taft Benson said.

Finlinson said he agrees.

Neo-Nazis released, police to appeal

OSLO, Norway — A court on Tuesday ordered the release of three neo-Nazis suspected in the slaying of a teen-ager, pending their possible trial on what was believed to be a racial killing. Two others were held over in custody.

Police had asked that all five be held for four weeks and immediately appealed the release to a higher court. Shortly after the release, one male suspect was again arrested to begin serving a separate jail sentence.

Murder or accessory to murder charges still stand against the five, police said. A ruling on the police's appeal was expected Wednesday or Thursday.

The three men in their 20s and two 17-year-old girls were arrested Saturday, hours after 15-year-old Benjamin Hermansen, whose father is Ghanian and mother Norwegian, was stabbed to death near his home in Oslo. They deny killing Hermansen.

Yeltsin at hospital for infection scare

MOSCOW — Former Russian President Boris Yeltsin was rushed to a hospital Tuesday with a fever and a suspected viral infection.

Yeltsin was taken to the government's Central Clinical Hospital on the western outskirts of Moscow with what doctors believed was an "acute viral infection," his aide Valentin Shevchenko said, according to Russian news reports. An intensive course of treatment will take at least several days, he said.

Shevchenko said Yeltsin's temperature was measured at 100.4 and he was hospitalized to "avoid risks." He said there were no signs of any heart ailment, and Yeltsin's blood pressure and pulse remained normal.

Yeltsin, who turns 70 on Thursday, underwent quintuple bypass surgery in 1996, shortly after winning a second term. He limped from one hospitalization to another in the years that followed - getting treatment for ailments ranging from pneumonia to bronchitis to ulcers.

Matheson meets president for lunch

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Rep. Jim Matheson, D-Salt Lake City, and 30 other newly-elected freshmen members of Congress met with President George W. Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney for lunch in Washington Monday.

"It was great to have an opportunity to meet with the president and vice president in a small setting," Matheson said.

"The president expressed a desire to work together with Congress, and at today's gathering appeared to be reaching out to the freshmen members in particular," he said.

Meeting with a president for the first time, Matheson rubbed elbows with the vice president and touched on budget and tax issues, as well as the president's education proposal released last Wednesday.

"It impressed Congressman Matheson that President Bush would go to the trouble to host this event," said Alyson Heyrend, press secretary to Matheson.

Time zones may affect polling fairness

SALT LAKE CITY — Some state lawmakers want to close polls for presidential elections at the same time nationwide to keep broadcasters from announcing results before Western voters cast their ballots.

"Our country is being disfranchised, especially in the West, by predicting winners before the entire country has had a chance to vote," said Rep. Carl Saunders, R-Ogden, who sponsored a resolution passed Monday by the House Government Operations Committee.

The measure suggests that polls close at 10 p.m. in the East, 9 p.m. in the Midwest, 8 p.m. for states on Mountain time and 7 p.m. on the West Coast.

But at least two representatives said closing polls earlier in the past could prevent some residents from making it to the polls.

"You are disadvantaging Western voters by closing polls early," said Dayton.

Saunders also suggested a shorter work-day on election day for that reason.

Utah's altitude increases risk of skin cancer

By Melissa True Gibbs
gibbs@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

People hiking and camping in the cold Utah mountains face a higher risk of skin cancer than those playing volleyball on the beach in Florida or California, according to the Utah State Department of Health.

Utah has the highest rate of skin cancer in the United States, according to the Utah Department of Health.

Utah's altitude plays a major factor in skin cancer, according to the department. High altitude lowers the buffering effect of the atmosphere against ultraviolet rays.

"There is a very strong correlation between altitude and skin cancer," said Richard Bullogh, a director at the Utah State Department of Health. "As altitude increases, skin cancer increases."

Salt Lake City's elevation is 4,500 feet and the Wasatch Mountains reach more than 11,000 feet.

According to R. Dirk Noyes, a surgical oncologist in Salt Lake City, people with fair complexions are most at risk for developing skin cancer.

According to the Autumn 2000 edition of the Utah Data Guide from the Governor's office of Planning and Budget, 88.6 percent of Utah residents are Caucasian.

Because many Utah residents have fair skin and the state has a high altitude, they have a dangerous combination, Noyes said.

According to the American Academy of Family Physicians there are many factors that may put an individual at risk of having skin cancer: fair skin, red or blond hair, light-colored eyes and the presence of many moles, freckles or birthmarks are high-risk factors.

Other factors include sunburning easily, working or playing outside, having family members with skin cancer and tanning in the sun or with a sunlamp.

According to the AAFP, most skin cancer occurs on areas of the body that are exposed to the sun. These areas include the head, neck, face, ears, hands, forearms and legs.

The American Academy of Dermatology reports that skin cancer has become an epidemic in the United States, but when caught early enough, has 95 percent cure rate.

Darrell Riegel, M.D., a former president of the American Academy of Dermatology said that the rate of skin cancer is doubling every eight to 10 years.

The National Cancer Institute reports that skin cancer is the most common type of cancer in the United States.

Ultraviolet radiation from the sun is the greatest and most avoidable cause of skin cancer.

The NCI estimates that 40 to 50 percent of Americans who live to age 60 will have skin cancer at least once. Each year 1 million people in the U.S. learn they have skin cancer.

Statistics show the risk of skin cancer has increased over the past century. A person born in 1935 had a 1-in-15,000 chance of getting cancer. A person born in 1997 has a chance of 1 in 74, according to the NCI.

> "Utah has the highest rate of skin cancer in the United States."
> — Utah State Department of Health

The key to preventing skin cancer is staying out of the sun, especially during the hours of 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. when the sun's rays are the strongest, said the AAD.

The AAFP affirmed that clouds and water don't provide protection from ultraviolet rays. Sixty to 80 percent of the sun's rays can get through the clouds, and reach swimmers at least one foot below the surface of the water.

The AAFP said that wide-brimmed hats, clothes made from tight-woven cloth and sunscreen with a sun protection factor of at least 15 can help protect skin from the sun's harmful rays.

the world and its cultures and learning to communicate in other languages. It also means developing the know-how to conduct business effectively in other countries and improving intercultural skills in an increasingly diverse U.S. workplace, he said.

Many LDS students at BYU said serving a foreign mission gave them the confidence to interact in the ever-expanding global market.

"My mission opened my eyes to what's out there in the rest of the world," said Matt Durham, a senior majoring in communications studies. "I feel that because they have learned to adapt to a different culture, it is now easier for returned missionaries to continue to adapt to many other cultures, as well."

Patrick said she tries to teach study abroad students about the differences in the cultural systems before they leave for their overseas homes.

"Students will experience culture shock wherever they go," Patrick said. "Students need to expect the unexpected."

Patrick explained that, just like LDS missionaries, study abroad students undergo a rigorous series of developmental stages.

According to Patrick, study abroad students and missionaries all must undergo the same four-step process.

"These students here are like new missionaries," Patrick said. "They are giddy, they are scared and they don't know what to expect."

"At first they're euphoric, then they go through the doldrums. Next, they hit a plateau, and finally, they wish they could stay longer," Patrick said.

With over 1,000 students in the study abroad program last year, the University of Arizona sends many more students abroad than most universities, Patrick said.

U of A religious groups give faithful students a spiritual foundation

By Stephen Snow
stephen@newsroom.byu.edu

While BYU's student wards attempt to offer social, spiritual and educational guidance, establishing a religious organization designed to help college students is not an idea unique to Provo.

Many colleges across the nation are surrounded by religious organizations to help young adults find meaning in their lives and maintain a spiritual perspective on life.

On the borders of the University of Arizona's desert campus stand several institutions established to help students in much the same way as BYU's student wards.

The Baptist Student Union, just two blocks from the center of campus, offers U of A students values, friends and a spiritual guide to help them wade through the temptations of college life, said Sarah Glockner, 21, a senior majoring in atmospheric sciences at the U of A.

"BSU has definitely kept me grounded and focused," Glockner said.

"Instead of getting involved in other organizations where my life would waste away, BSU has helped me focus on God," Glockner said.

Much like a BYU student ward, BSU offers a variety of activities for students throughout the week.

Every Tuesday night, a devotional called Refuge attracts nearly 60 students.

Like a fireside from The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Refuge highlights an inspirational speaker from either BSU or a nearby Baptist church and concludes with refreshments.

Friday nights at BSU could easily be mistaken for an LDS young single adult activity.

"We get together and do fellowship activities, such as broomball," Glockner said.

Across the street from BSU sits the Islamic Center of Tucson, a mosque catering to the needs of U of A students.

"Islam is a very demanding religion," said Omar Shahin, director of the mosque.

"Nearly 400 of our 600 members are students and most of them attend at least one of our five daily prayer services," Shahin said.

Shahin said the most difficult aspect of student life for Muslims at the U of A is finding compatible roommates.

Nasser Alnuaimi, director of the Muslim Student Association, said he believes it is his job to assist Muslim students in making the cultural transition to college life.

"Students come to the Islamic Center to find roommates who at least have the same religion and customs," Alnuaimi said.

Alnuaimi said without a place like the Islamic Center in their lives, Muslim students tend to get lost in the transition to college life as they lose their priorities.

Similar to BSU, the Islamic Center offers a weekly devotional for spiritual development and other fellowship activities throughout the week.

said the school board feels that it is important to work hand in hand with the district's patrons.

This feeling was the basis for a survey conducted earlier this month by independent research firm Insight Research among patrons of the Alpine School District.

The district commissioned the survey because they wanted to get a perception of how their patrons felt about the growth. The district also wanted to get public input on how to deal with the overcrowding issue, Henshaw said.

According to survey results, the public overwhelmingly feels that overcrowding is an issue. Of the survey's 600 respondents, 43 percent indicated that the new growth in the district is a very serious problem, while 44 percent said it is a somewhat serious problem.

Only 1 percent indicated their belief that the issue of overcrowding is not at all serious.

The district has looked to solve the overcrowding issue by building additional schools, moving to a year-round schedule, installing more portable classrooms, increasing class size, scheduling double sessions or providing busing to move students to less crowded schools.

According to survey results, public opinion is strongest in favor of building new schools: 93 percent of respondents favor this option.

The second most favored option, portable classrooms, comes in at 55 percent. Increasing class size is the least favored option, with 8 percent of respondents in favor of the action.

Based on public opinion, Henshaw said that preliminary plans call for the construction of 11 new schools and the renovation of 30 existing facilities over the next four to five years.

The board will continue to gather public input this month and vote to pass the resolution to hold the bond sometime next month, Henshaw said.

If the resolution passes, the fate of the bond will be in the hands of citizens. Between 66 and 67 percent of patrons surveyed said they would have voted for the bond if it was held the day they were surveyed.

New historical book tells of Pacific Saints

By Mary Dondiego

Those who waited in line for hours to see the film "Legacy" or "Testaments" can identify with the desire to connect with the life of faithful pioneers of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

However, not all of the church's pioneers are associated with handcarts and oxen.

A new book from the Joseph Fielding Smith Institute for Latter-day Saint History, entitled "Voyages of Faith," tells inspirational stories of a different group of church pioneers — those in the Pacific Islands.

Grant Underwood, research historian and editor of "Voyages of Faith," said the book fulfills a need for LDS history outside the mainland United States.

"A strong cultural background is a crucial part of the identities of Pacific Islander Latter-day Saints and is often rooted in the past.

"History has the ability to deepen and reinforce their culture — it is something they can identify with," he said.

"Voyages of Faith" was introduced this December at the 20th anniversary meeting of the Mormon Pacific Historical Society, Underwood said.

The book is unique because of the breadth and variety of information contained inside, he said.

The book has chapters of solid scholarly information as well as more personal memoir pieces, said R. Lanier Britsch, professor of history and contributor to the book.

"To my knowledge, this is the only book that is a compilation of articles dealing with church history in the Pacific," Britsch said. "Some of the feelings and emotions conveyed in the book you cannot find anywhere else."

The release of the book also coincided with the Dec. 12 sesquicentennial of the first LDS mission outside North America to a non-European people, which was to the island of Tubuai in French Polynesia.

Underwood said that even though Pacific Islander Latter-day Saints can resonate with the book, it is also directed to a general audience of readers looking for historic faith-promoting stories.

"It's inspirational for readers to know that God has been dealing with his people all over the world," he said.

"This book relates wonderful accounts of ordinary people receiving extraordinary blessings."

> "It's inspirational for readers to know that God has been dealing with his people all over the world. This book relates wonderful accounts of ordinary people receiving extraordinary blessings."
> —Grant Underwood, Editor of "Voyages of Faith"

The title "Voyages of Faith" denotes the literal as well as figurative journeys of faith that those in the Pacific have experienced, Underwood said.

"This kind of thing is of interest to a mainland audience because of the times we live in. We are part of an international church, and over half the members of the church reside outside North America," he said.

Underwood said many people, especially BYU students, are interested in seeking a connection to those with different backgrounds, but who also have the same faith.

Missionary work often contributes to this increased cultural sensitivity, he said.

"Voyages of Faith" is published by the BYU Press and may be purchased at the BYU Bookstore.

Popularity of LDS fictio raises interests, concerns

In recent years, Latter-day Saint literature has gained considerable popularity, especially in the historical fiction genre.

Series like Gerald Lund's "The Work and the Glory" have attracted LDS readers who learn and are entertained at the same time.

"I think Mormons are such a practical people," said Dean Hughes, BYU professor of English and LDS literature author.

"If they can read something that's entertaining that also teaches history and at the same time is affirmative without being simple minded, that's what people seem to be looking for," he said.

Hughes is the author of the popular LDS series "Children of the Promise," a series set during World War II. He said LDS literature has come a long way in recent years.

Only 25 years ago, almost no literature existed for the LDS audience, Hughes said.

When LDS literature did begin to develop, it seemed to be faith-promoting stories, he said.

Historical fiction, however, seems to challenge readers more and help them learn about history, Hughes said.

Although the reception of historical fiction has been overwhelming, there are also concerns associated with the genre.

Hughes said while historical fiction can be educational, it is not as important as sacrament meeting or scriptures.

"People start placing novels on too high of a rung," he said.

Historical fiction should not replace sc study, said Camille Fronk, assistant profes ancient scripture.

"There is a great power in reflecting what i to us in scripture or church history," she said.

Although the impact of historical fiction has ally been good, authors must take care to mak works historically accurate, said Richard Holl associate professor of church history and doct

Y offers 60 different languages

By Angela Pace

NewsNet Staff Writer

The Center for Language Studies in the College of Humanities offers up to 60 different languages every semester.

Last summer was the first time BYU offered less commonly taught languages.

Some of the less common languages available to students include Tongan, Navajo, Turkish, Afrikaans, Thai, Greek and Swahili, according to the director for the Center for Language Studies.

The center first began the program two years ago when Melvin Luthy, director for the Center for Language Studies, proposed that the college expand the language classes offered at BYU.

"We were trying to help returned missionaries across the country get credit for the languages they speak," Luthy said. "They can take advanced classes in their language over the summer and then get 12 to 16 credit hours of additional credit."

Arabic, Spanish, Swedish and Japanese are the four intensive study courses offered this summer term at the basic levels.

Anyone can register as a visiting student and take the classes during summer term, Luthy said.

The center will be sending more than 1,000 letters to returned missionaries in the United States and Canada to recruit them to come to BYU for language study.

"By teaching these students the languages, it raises the chances that they will use them professionally and to forward the goals of the LDS Church," Luthy said.

Adjunct faculty members come to BYU and teach these classes based on demand and at the request of the center, Luthy said

Students interested in taking a language not offered at BYU should make a language request at humanities.byu.edu/cls/home.htm l or visit the Center for Language Studies office at 2054 JKHB.

The center gives opportunities to people with experience in other countries or returned missionaries that they would not be able to find anywhere else, said Walter Whipple, professor of Polish, Czech and Serbocroation.

"I think it is valuable for them to find out about the country they served in because they don't have time while they're missionaries to do research," Whipple said.

Daniel Reeves, 22, a junior majoring in geography teaching from Hooper, Weber County, was a student of Whipple's. Reeves said he thought the Czech class he took was worthwhile.

"I went to the Czech Republic and Slovakia on my mission, and I wanted to take a class where I could learn more about the countries I served in," Reeves said.c

The center offers a language studies colloquium series every Thursday at 11 a.m. in 2025 JKHB where professors discuss their research in different languages.

BYU missionaries thrive on campus

The two men wearing dark suits and missionary nametags on campus are not just overzealous returned missionaries — BYU has its very own set of LDS elders.

At a university saturated with members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, it might seem like there is nobody for the BYU missionaries to teach. Surprisingly, though, missionary work at BYU is thriving, according to the BYU campus missionaries.

"It's great. There's a lot of work going on," said Elder Vatikan, 20, from Vavau, Tonga, who has served at BYU for the past six months.

Vatikan and his companion, Elder Rapier, 20, from Moreno Valley, Calif., said BYU has an ideal atmosphere for missionary work because of its strong spirit and abundance of preparing and returned missionaries.

"There's really a missionary spirit here," Rapier said.

Vatikan and Rapier said they find people to teach through members. They can often be found on campus or tracting in nearby neighborhoods, asking students if they have non-member friends interested in learning about the church.

Jeff Bush, 21, a freshman from Houston, majoring in computer engineering, returned nine months ago from his two years as a missionary in the Utah Provo Mission. He said he spent the first three months of his mission serving on BYU's campus.

"I loved working with c students my age and being a interact with them as fr Bush said.

Skyroom changes menu, prices

By Angela L. Twining
alt@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The Skyroom Restaurant constantly strives to be a mark of elegance and sophistication from the sixth floor of the Wilkinson Student Center. And just three weeks ago, it introduced a new menu.

"We have to keep up with the trends of the food industry and serve what people like," said Jessica Christensen, manager of the Skyroom.

Some old dishes were brought back and new dishes, like the Kona Coast Crispy Chicken Strips and Buffalo Chicken Strips, were added.

"We also increased the span of pricing," Christensen said. "We wanted to make it more affordable for students."

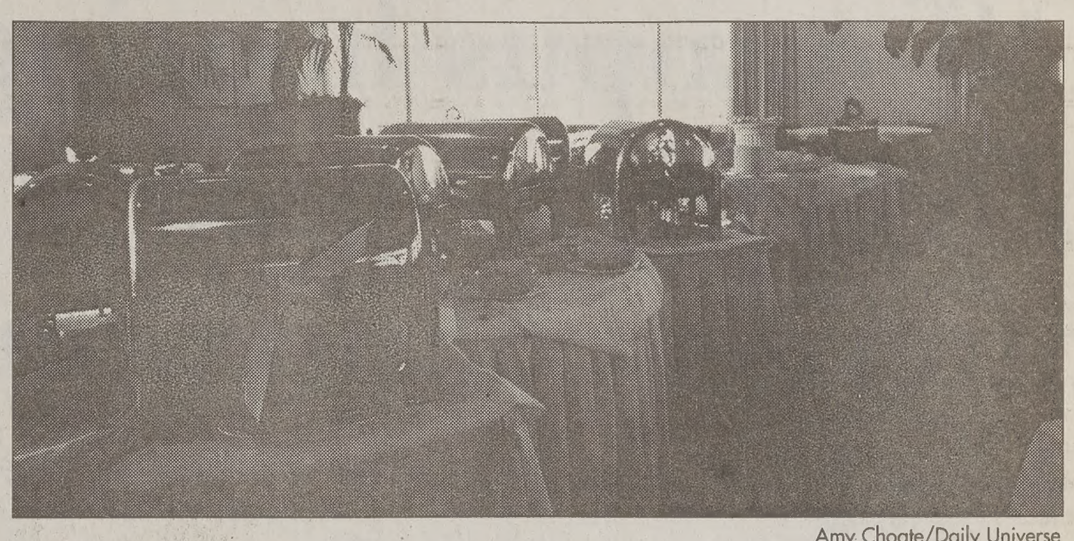
The Skyroom audience now is mainly freshmen and faculty, but Christensen said she hopes to draw a new crowd with the prices and ethnic buffets.

Every Tuesday after Devotional, the Skyroom buffet features a different country with authentic foods. Christensen said many of her student employees are from the countries featured, so the recipes are genuine.

She said if the employees don't know how to make the genuine dishes, she seeks out the help of returned missionaries and the BYU language departments.

Some ethnic foods to be featured during February include Australian, Thai, Greek and Polynesian, Christensen said.

The menu, including all upcoming buffets, can be found on the Web at www.byu.edu/dining/skyroom.



Amy Choate/Daily Universe

Buffet tables are heavy laden, ready to serve in the Skyroom Restaurant. The restaurant hopes to draw more business with lower prices and ethnic dishes.

Charya Lieng, 19, a freshman from Anaheim, Calif., majoring in broadcast journalism, said she likes the Skyroom because of the buffet and the atmosphere.

"It's classy but affordable," Lieng said.

"I like the structure of it — the architecture inside is beautiful. It's so open," she said.

Having Dining Plus is really a plus, she said. Freshmen can purchase meals at the sit-down restaurant on their meal plans.

The Skyroom is a chance for them to do something on-campus, yet different and nice, she said.

"I love the atmosphere here. We dim the lights on Friday nights and put up little candles on the tables — it's so elegant," said Allison Harrel, 20, a senior from San Diego, Calif., majoring in international law and diplomacy and a host at the Skyroom.

Christensen also said the quieter lunches make the Skyroom attractive.

"It's just so busy everywhere else," she said.

Lieng said even though she won't have Dining Plus next year as a sophomore, she still plans to go to the Skyroom.

The Skyroom is open Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., except Tuesday when it opens after Devotional. Also, the Skyroom is open Friday evenings from 5:30 to 8 p.m.

Off-campus housing offers high-speed Internet connection

> "The availability of a T1 line will be a factor in my decision as long as the apartment is nice and has a good social scene."
> — Chalyce Bohne, BYU student

Behind the walls of The Glenwood, Riviera, Raintree and University Villa apartments lies a high-bandwidth digital circuit operating at 1.536 Mbps, or about one-sixth the speed of Ethernet.

This T1 system is being offered free of charge to apartment residents, according to representatives of the apartment complexes.

T1 allows students to talk on the phone and use the Internet at the same time.

"This service is free, limited to one computer in the living room," said Tracy Osborne, an office assistant at The Glenwood.

"If you want access in your own bedroom, it is $24.95 a month plus a $30 activation fee," Osborne said.

As students search for apartments, some have found this free access to be a deciding factor in their decision.

"When it came down to deciding between two apartment complexes, I chose the one that offered T1," said Jeremy Newswander, 23, a junior from Modesto, Calif., majoring in construction management.

More renters have shown interest in The Glenwood, Riviera, Raintree and University Villa apartments after being told about T1, said Jeff Goldman, assistant director of resident relations for Glenwood Intermountain Properties.

"The T1 line will soon be available to renters of these apartments," said Tiffany Sorensen, office manager at University Villa.

"It is still in the process of being installed, but the residents are anxiously awaiting," she said.

Some students who must find their own Internet servers have difficulties.

"It's another bill, and high-speed Internet is not available in every complex," said Wendy Bryan, 20, a sophomore from Chicago, majoring in English.

"It would save so much time and money to have it already installed," said Bryan, a resident of Belmont condominiums.

For a full T1 circuit, Robert Lipschutz, a writer for PC Magazine, said an individual should expect to pay somewhere between $200 and $700 per month, with a one-time installation charge of between $200 and $500.

"For Internet connections, don't forget the bill from the ISP will range between $800 and $2,000 per month for the portal into the Internet," Lipschutz said.

A T1 circuit has its own dedicated port on a router at the Internet service provider, said Brent Oswald, a senior network systems advisor for Illuminati Online.

"This means other customer circuits won't affect the performance of your T1," Oswald said.

As students look for housing, many factors are taken into consideration, said Chalyce Bohne, 21, a senior from Walnut Creek, Calif., majoring in biology composite teaching.

"I enjoy living in Liberty Square because of the social scene," Bohne said.

"But the availability of a T1 line will be a factor in my decision as long as the apartment is nice and has a good social scene."

Singer and songwriter Eric Vincent is coming to BYU this weekend, bringing his guitar and his French songs.

Vincent is a performer from Paris coming from Los Angeles, Calif., where he performed last week. He is playing Friday, Feb. 2 at 7 p.m. in the Madsen Recital Hall.

He sings original songs in French while accompanying himself on the guitar. His songs are a blend of folk, jazz, rock and rhythms, said Johanne Hillam, a visiting faculty member.

"He's very congenial and makes everyone feel at ease because he's such a down-to-earth person," Hillam said. "There's something in his music that reaches you. It's for all genres."

Hillam said Vincent came to BYU 15 years ago to perform and the concert was well attended, even though he sang in French.

According to Vincent's Web site, www.eric-vincent.com, the language barrier is overcome by the lively spirit of his music.

"His songs offer direct contact with contemporary French poetry and are flavored by his world tr els," states the Web site.

The Web site states his style is sophisticated, still portrays a warm and relaxed atmosphe which makes the audience feel at ease.

Graduate degree programs open doors, teach life skills

For some graduates, life after an undergraduate degree means no school, no tests and a job that pays more than $6 an hour.

But for some, school is anything but over.

"I've always wanted a graduate degree. ... The great thing about any graduate degree is the skills you can use in all parts of your life — incredible life skills," said Heather Lau, a second-year graduate student in the Masters in Business Administration program and the first woman president of the MBA Association at BYU.

"I see it as an opportunity to better myself and gain experiences," she said.

Rachael McKinnon, a second-year graduate student in the MBA program at BYU, said she sees her pursuit of a graduate degree as a great example to her children.

"If I never have to work a day in my life, I'll be grateful for my degree because it will teach my kids the importance of getting an education," McKinnon said.

Jennifer Sorensen, a second-year graduate student in the MBA program at BYU, said she initially felt intimidated by the thought of going back to school, but has since changed her mind.

"I'm just glad I chose to do it. I'm glad I came back to school. It opened a lot of doors for me," she said.

But an advanced degree may not be for eve body, Lau said.

"What it comes down to is it's a personal de sion. The Lord knows what's ahead," she said.

"It's been a great opportunity to develop my le ership abilities that will be a great asset in future to the church, community and my famil Lau said.

Bennett said being a police officer requires dedication 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

"I tend to watch everybody. My eyes have been opened to what happens in everyday life behind closed doors. I just watch the people I see closely," he said.

Moreno said the most challenging aspect of being an officer is that so many crimes go unreported.

Lawyers to debate same-sex marriage at BYU symposium

By Mary Morley

NewsNet Staff Writer

The American Law Institue is proposing "ideal" family laws that would legally recognize same-sex partnerships.

Legal scholars and professionals from around the nation will meet at BYU, Thursday through Saturday to discuss these new model laws.

The three-day symposium, which is free for BYU students and faculty, will be a forum for legal professionals to debate the pros and cons of the ideals for law reform proposed by the American Law Institute.

Lynn Wardale, a BYU law professor and one of the organizers of the symposium, said that because most law professors tend to be liberal in family law issues, the proposed model laws have been well received so far.

"One of the purposes of the conference is to allow people who have some questions about this policy to raise these questions in a very credible fashion," Wardale said.

"Rather profound changes are being proposed," he said.

"It's going to be very cutting edge, very current discussion," said Larry Johnson, 27, a third-year BYU law student from Sandy.

A three-day symposium which starts Thursday will discuss family laws proposed by the American Law Institute. Some of the topics being discussed are:

- Same-sex partnerships.
- Does the Constitution qualify the state's authority to define who counts as a parent?
- Family financial issues: child support, compensory payments, property.
- Domestic partners.
- How the recognition and proliferation of domestic partnerships will affect marriage.

Elder L. Aldin Porter
Senior President of the Quorums of the Seventy

Elder L. Aldin Porter was named a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy in April 1991 after having served as a member of the Second Quorum of the Seventy. He has served as Executive Director of the Missionary Department, as an Assistant Executive Director in both the Family History and Missionary Departments, as a member of the presidency of the South America South Area, and as president of the Utah South Area.

At the time of his call to serve as a full-time General Authority, Elder Porter was serving as president of the Louisiana Baton Rouge Mission. He has also served as bishop, stake president, Regional Representative, counselor in the Boise Temple presidency, and missionary to the West Central States.

The Salt Lake City native is married to Shirley Palmer. The Porters are the parents of six children and have 31 grandchildren.

'Guitarist of the decade' finds forum in Utah home

Concert series hosts acoustic fingerstylist

By Darin Helfend
helfend@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The guitarist of the decade, so named by "Guitarist Magazine," will take a break from his U.S. tour to perform in Provo this weekend.

Adrian Legg will take part in the Timpanogos Intimate Concert Series, a bi-monthly, local concert series. It will be in the home of Mark Davis, a BYU adjunct law professor, this Saturday at 7 p.m. at 647 N. 1280 East in Orem.

Legg was voted best acoustic fingerstyle guitarist in 1993, 1994, 1995 and 1996 in the Guitar Player 26th Annual Reader's Poll.

"In general, the Timpanogos Intimate Concert Series gives you the chance to see a world-class performer not from the 60th row of a huge concert hall but in a living room just a few feet away from you," Davis said.

The musicians invited to perform at the Timpanogos Intimate Concert Series are nationally touring acoustic musicians from the folk music genre.

"Most people think folk music is just sitting around a campfire singing 'Kumbaya,' but folk music has diversity ranging from country and pop to acoustic rock 'n' roll," said Boyd Petersen, a BYU Honors lecturer and promoter for the Timpanogos Intimate Concert Series.

The concert series allows BYU students to participate in the traditional college experience by exploring new music and becoming part of the local music scene, Petersen said.

"In many college towns, students go to bars to see live music — BYU students don't do the bar scene," Petersen said. "But with the Timpanogos Intimate Concert Series, students can take the positive side of live music and enjoy a 100 percent safe atmosphere."

The wide variety of musicians also provides students the opportunity to broaden their horizons and musical interests, Petersen said.

Since most of the musicians who play at the concert are extremely talented but relatively unknown, students may feel they are taking a gamble on a musician they may not like. However, through the Timpanogos Intimate Concert Series' Web site, http://come.to/timpanogos, students can sample the music upcoming performers before deciding to go, Petersen said.

"In order to find musical gems you have to take chances, but through the Internet and mp3 files you can listen to the musician and decide if that style of music interests you," he said.

At the concerts there are neither fancy sets nor elaborate equipment – there is nothing separating the audience from the performer, Petersen said.

> "It is better than dinner and a movie, and probably cheaper."
> —Boyd Peterson
> BYU Honors lecturer

Admission to the concerts varies between $5 and $10 according to which musician is performing, and all the money goes to the musician.

"These are musicians who usually charge between $40 and $50 a seat, but their purpose here is not to make money," Petersen said.

For the musicians, this type of concert is a nice change from their usual shows, Davis said.

"Even though the musicians don't make a lot of money they say these concerts are the most enjoyable because of the close, intimate setting," Davis said.

Students can benefit from these concerts because it allows for a change of pace and brings new experiences, Petersen said.

"It's a great date idea," Davis said.

"It is better than dinner and a movie, and probably cheaper," Petersen said.

ENTERTAINMENT BRIEF

LOS ANGELES — The cinematographers for "Gladiator" and "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" were first-time nominees Monday for the annual American Society of Cinematographers award.

John Mathieson was honored for his work on "Gladiator," while Peter Pau earned a nomination for "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon."

They will be vying against cinematographers for "The Patriot," "The Perfect Storm" and "O Brother, Where Art Thou?"

"The only common denominator in each of these films is that the cinematographers made significant contributions to the stories in ways that supported the intentions of the director and augmented the performances of the actors," ASC President Victor J. Kemper said.

"O Brother" cinematographer Roger Deakins has previous nominations for "Fargo" and "Kundun," and won the award in 1994 for "The Shawshank Redemption."

Caleb Deschanel of "The Patriot" was nominated once before for "Fly Away Home" in 1996.

John Seale from "The Perfect Storm" won the award in 1996 for "The English Patient" and was nominated for "Rain Man" in 1988.

The winner will be announced Feb. 18 at the 15th annual ASC Awards dinner.

Biggest Checks in Bank's History Cashed by Eclipse Employees

Provo, UT – While other returning college students were busy writing checks for books, rent and tuition, employees of Eclipse Marketing were busy cashing checks – larger than one local bank has ever seen before. One of the bank's tellers commented, "I've never seen anything like this before. I've only seen checks this big on T.V. or in movies like Happy Gilmore. They're not only big in size but in dollar amount as well – I cashed one for $25,000! I couldn't believe it!"

Employees Net Thousands at Annual Awards Banquet

During an annual awards banquet hosted by Eclipse Marketing, many employees found themselves holding checks too big to simply tuck away in a pocket. And worth more money than most any one of them has ever seen before. These "larger than life" bonus checks represent the size of the accomplishment achieved by these college students while working for Eclipse Marketing during the summer of 2000. The amount of these "Big Money Bonus" checks ranged anywhere from $5,000.00 to $45,000.00. As expressed by more than one employee that night, "I've never seen this much money at one time, especially with my name on it."

Annually, Eclipse marketing sends hundreds of college age students across the country trained and ready to sell pest control services or security systems. These employees are sent in groups of to urban locations throughout the U.S., from Seattle, Washington to Miami, Florida and many other cities in between.

Eclipse employees Tim Stark and Matt Sterzer ready to cash in on some needed tuition money.

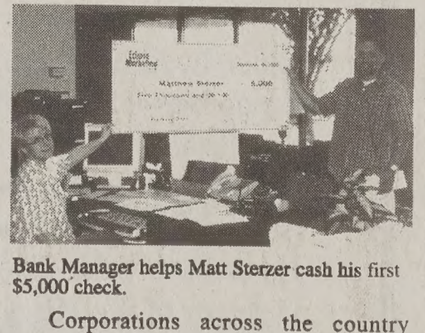
In business for 10 years now, Eclipse Marketing has helped thousands of college students graduate from school debt free. Some earn enough to pay for their entire education in just one summer. but the uses for this money are many and varied. Just this past summer, Mike Proudfit, a student at Brigham Young University, earned close to $100,000, enough to pay for four years of schooling, buy a car and have plenty of money left to invest for the future.

According to Mike, "Working for Eclipse has brought me to an experience and financial level I would have never dreamed of being at by the age of 24. Yes, I have made some good money in the past few years, but more importantly I have gained the skills and determination needed to be successful at what ever I do in life."

Eclipse Captures Inc. 500 Status Two Year

Eclipse Marketing has maintained steady growth each year since it's incorporation in 1991. Inc. Magazine has recognized Eclipse Marketing for two years in a row as one of the fastest growing companies in the nation and named Eclipse as part of the prestigious Inc. 500 list.

In response to questions about the success and uniqueness of the company, Brent Bingham, President and founder of Eclipse Marketing, expresses a rather philosophical viewpoint. According to Bingham, "One of the most exciting aspects of our business is that we build foundations of success in the lives of all our employees. If they can be successful selling door-to-door, they can be successful at anything." "It goes without saying," says Bingham, "we are extremely proud of our employees. They demonstrate tremendous personal growth while they are with us, and afterwards are able to maximize that experience in their chosen careers."



Bank Manager helps Matt Sterzer cash his first $5,000 check.

Corporations across the country recognize the caliber of employee Eclipse sends out into the business world. With graduate degree in hand and Eclipse Marketing on their resume, former employees are finding their experience at Eclipse to be a huge asset in the job market.

Eclipse continues to espouse a corporate philosophy based upon hard work, trust, keeping commitments and continually striving to improve. Their accomplishments of the past 10 years have proven this to be true.

said the contract is upwards of 50 million or the conference. That rickles down to BYU. is money involved. Of course," said Brett Pyne, director of Sports Information.

It is also a national popularity contest between colleges to win over recruits and more fans.

"BYU has determined they want to be one of the premiere programs in the country and they were willing to make some sacrifices," Minor said.

But some believe the control of television is disrupting the college sports community's original intentions. Fifty-five year old Salt Lake City resident Jay Benson, who usually attends the game with his daughter Brenda, came to Monday's game alone.

"She's got school tomorrow," Benson said. "It's about money, I know that. But I don't know who stays up late enough to watch it on TV anyway. I would rather be here with my family."

Pyne admits there are drawbacks to television's clout.

"The students probably benefit more than the families of the community," Pyne said.

But ESPN's interest in benefitting from BYU's ratings potential is not all bad, Minor said. It is also a sign that the program has improved.

"BYU is one of the jewels of the conference as far as ESPN is concerned," Minor said.

Salt Lake now home to Stingers, not Buzz

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Keeping the bee motif but dropping the "zz" fad, the owners of the Salt Lake Buzz have decided to rename their Pacific Coast League team the Stingers.

The new name is subject to approval by professional baseball's national association Wednesday.

"That was our first choice all along," said team co-owner Hilary Drammis, who sorted through about 2,000 suggestions over the past six weeks.

"It has ties to the old names, it works with the Beehive State, and it's exciting. It suggests the crack of a bat, a real stinging hit," said Drammis, who was quoted in a copyright story in The Salt Lake Tribune Tuesday.

Drammis said the team considered using Stingerzz to stay in line with the state's other professional franchises, such as the Jazz, the Grizzlies and the Pioneerzz.

"But when we asked people about it, we got the feeling that people liked the z's if they were natural, but didn't want it if they weren't," she said.

Drammis and her father, co-owner Joe Buzas, decided to change the name to create more interest, signal a fresh start with their new parent club, the Anaheim Angels, and make moot any potential legal challenges over Georgia Tech's "Buzz" mascot.

They thought it would take only a couple of weeks to decide on a new name, but now it's nearly February and uniforms haven't been ordered, schedules haven't been printed and the half-million-dollar changeover — everything from stationery to the electronic marquee — hasn't begun.

With opening night set for April 13, a decision could wait no longer.

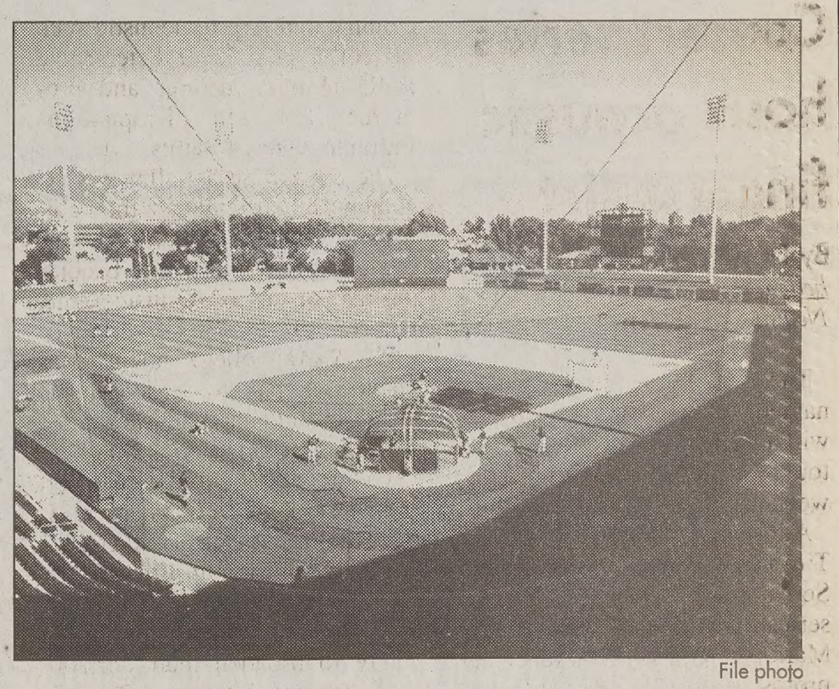
Ten days ago, Drammis and Picknell were fearful that the naming process was a bust, and that the team would have to resort to a relatively generic name such as Mountain Cats.

Drammis and Picknell ranked their favorites and began the laborious process of securing trademarks, merchandising rights and Internet domain names.

That's when the trouble began. Turns out, most of the names the team favored — Saints, Crickets, Halos and Wings — were already trademarked.

The NFL wouldn't even respond to their inquiries about allowing Saints to be used, and possibilities such as Gulls or Meteors were in use by several teams.

One by one, names were crossed off.



File photo

Franklin Covey Field in Salt Lake is home to the newly renamed Salt Lake Stingers. Opening day is April 13.

"Things were getting a little desperate. We decided to go back to the top of our list and start over. We called everyone who had Stingers trademarked, and to my shock, everyone was really agreeable," Drammis said.

The Chicago Stingers, a pro soccer team, agreed to allow its use, as did the Pittsburgh Stingers, an indoor soccer team. Hockey teams in Bozeman, Mont., and Wilmington, Ohio, went along too, and over the weekend, the papers finally were signed.

World Economic Forum discusses religion

Associated Press

DAVOS, Switzerland — After hearing some of the world's leading capitalists, the World Economic Forum drew to a close Tuesday with a look at a subject that has often eclipsed money in its ability to cause discord and anger: religion.

A group of religious leaders, including the chief rabbi of Israel, Meir Lau, and the grand mufti of Bosnia, Mustafa Ceric, issued a statement calling on business and political communities to hold dialogue with religious groups.

"The issues of globalization cannot be solved only on the levels of technology, economics and politics," Ceric said.

"We should include into process of globalization the meaning of morality, and I would say especially a morally inspired law that will guarantee the success of shortening the gap between those who are too rich and those who are too poor."

"Working toward inclusion, overcoming exclusion, is both an ethical and economic challenge," said Roman Catholic Archbishop Diarmuid Martin.

"We want to see how we can construct a world in which more people can participate," said Martin, the secretary of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace.

> "The issues of globalization cannot be solved only on the levels of technology, economics and politics."
> — Mustafa Ceric, Grand Mufti of Bosnia

The six-day meeting of world political and business leaders began with an address from the emir of Qatar on the role that Islam can play in the world, in which he noted that "the world should fear ignorance and poverty rather than religion."

The religious leaders said it was fitting the meeting should end with the subject of religion, allowing participants to leave on a spiritual note following days of serious economic discussion.

Many of Tuesday's events offered a lighter end to the forum. A group of musicians and filmmakers were honored for using their art to reach out to other cultures.

At the end of a series of private meetings between government ministers and business leaders, former U.S. Deputy Treasury Secretary Stuart Eizenstat said the leaders had agreed there was room for "cautious optimism" over the global economic outlook.

International labor concerns caused by shoemaker's policies

By Miriam Oh
miriam@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Labor practices resembling that of the industrial revolution have Nike contractors on the defense.

The Worker Rights Consortium (WRC) and the Fair Labor Association (FLA) are two labor rights groups that have raised employment violation concerns against a Nike and Reebok contractor in Puebla, Mexico.

Maintaining codes of conduct developed by colleges and universities to manage and protect the rights of workers in places where their goods are produced, the WRC, as well as the FLA, are among many organizations committed to upholding the standard set by labor laws.

The University of Utah and Utah State University are two of the 143 colleges and universities that are associated with these labor organizations, but BYU is not a member.

In an eight-page report released last week by the WRC, investigators claim the Kukdong factory in Puebla, Mexico, was in violation of Mexican and international worker's rights laws.

Nike, which contracts Kukdong to manufacture sweatshirts and other sports apparel bearing the logos of over 20 universities and colleges, said in a press release that they are "actively engaged" in finding a resolution.

In a joint effort by the WRC, Reebok, the FLA, and Kukdong management, Nike has committed to a full investigation of the alleged labor compliance violations of the facility, according to Nike reports. As well as working with Kukdong factory management in maintaining compliant working conditions.

"We have a concern for the general welfare of everybody in the country, the retailer, consumer and the worker," said Shane Hinckley, University of Utah licensing administrator. "We want to make sure that the goods made with our logo are associated in a positive light."

Allegations against Kukdong come from a series of events over the past few weeks that have led to accusations of unfair employee treatment and practices.

UTA's 16 new Sunday bus routes to begin April in SLC, Ogden

By Melissa True Gibbs
gibbs@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The Utah Transit Authority is ready to fuel up the buses and fire up their engines in preparation for 16 new Sunday bus routes scheduled to begin service in April.

UTA's board approved the expanded service Wednesday morning. UTA has been given a huge boost by last November's transit tax, and promised voters it would use the quarter-cent sales tax to add Sunday service.

The 16 new routes will join Route No. 70 — Salt Lake to Ogden, Route No. 811 — Utah Valley to the Sandy TRAX station and Route No. 50 — Salt Lake City to the International Airport, which have provided Sunday service for years.

The Sunday bus service follows the start of Sunday TRAX service last month.

UTA General Manager John Inglish explained why the company is choosing to begin Sunday operation with so few routes.

"If you put too many out there to start with and people come to rely on them, it could cause problems if overall ridership is small and we have to cut back," Inglish said.

Salt Lake Valley and the Ogden area will have Sunday routes, but Utah Valley will not. UTA executive Gerald Pachucki said the routes were chosen because they had the most Saturday use.

There are mixed feelings about Sunday service.

J.P. O'Reilly, 21, from Murray, Salt Lake County, said he uses public transportation every day to get to work.

"They have public transit in other cities on Sunday, why do we need to be any different," O'Reilly said.

The reason Utah is different, is because the majority of the population is LDS, he said.

Becki Banks, 25, a senior majoring in history, uses the bus to get to school and is disappointed that UTA has opened 16 new Sunday routes.

"Morally and religiously it is wrong," Banks said.

Demain Willett, 24, from Sandy, said he believes otherwise.

"I think the Sunday service will be good for a lot of people," Willett said.

The debate about Sunday bus service appears to be about religion rather than transportation.

Sarah Olsen, 22, a senior majoring in English, said she thinks it is a good thing.

"When I was a freshman I relied solely on the bus," Olsen said. "It was very hard to get rides to church, and eventually I had to attend a ward in Orem because I couldn't get to my BYU ward."

"We've just received word that the personnel have been told not to leave the building and they may have to stay overnight if the situation doesn't improve," Fred Eckhard, U.N. spokesman said.

Demonstrators appeared to be targeting French peacekeepers rather than U.N. officials. Cars were set on fire just outside the French army base located on the ethnic Albanian side of Kosovska Mitrovica.

Soldiers supported by armored personnel carriers were inside the perimeter of the base, occasionally firing tear gas and stun grenades at the stone-throwing crowd.

Ethnic Albanians have often vented their frustration at the French peacekeepers, because they are seen as being pro-Serb.

The new violence comes a year after large-scale riots in the town. A dozen people were killed and many others injured in clashes that began with grenade attacks on two Serb cafes and riots in which crowds of Serbs and ethnic Albanians faced each other over the bridge, separated by NATO forces.

Earlier Tuesday, Kosovo's top U.N. administrator had condemned Monday's violence.

Hans Haekkerup, the U.N. administrator for the province, said Kosovska Mitrovica's people must take responsibility for halting the riots that have flared repeatedly in the town 25 miles from the capital, Pristina.

"We will make every effort to provide security," Haekkerup said. But people must "join in that effort if we are ever to achieve a united and peaceful Mitrovica."

During Monday's melee, rioters stopped a car belonging to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, pulled OSCE employees from the car and one Serb employee of the organization had his jaw broken.

U.N. officials said Monday's attack appeared to be a provocation related to the first anniversary of clashes in Kosovska Mitrovica.

NATO-led peacekeepers also announced that a 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew would be imposed in the area where the attack occurred.

Separated by the Ibar River into hostile ethnic camps, Kosovska Mitrovica remains the province's most tense town more than 1 1/2 years after large-scale fighting between the two groups was ended with the pullout of Serb forces in exchange for an end to NATO bombing.

> "Regrettably, crowds of people in the south, apparently frustrated by the killing of an Albanian yesterday, continued to ignore appeals for calm."
> — Michael Keats, U.N. spokesman

Prison called unsuitable for disabled

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — The Disability Law Center in Salt Lake City has filed a complaint with the federal government alleging that the state prison at Point of the Mountain violates the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The complaint alleges there are cells not wheelchair accessible, showers that are too small for inmates in wheelchairs and a prison yard that some disabled inmates cannot use.

"The Utah Department of Corrections for too long has failed to comply with key components of the ADA," wrote Paul Curtis, attorney for the Disability Law Center.

Corrections spokesman Jack Ford said he had not seen the complaint, but that prison administrators have been working with the center to improve access for disabled inmates.

"We meet with the Disability Law Center the first Monday of every month," Ford said. "They talk about problems; we talk about solutions. But sometimes we can't solve all the problems. We just can't give them everything they want."

Curtis said they do not have a choice.

"They can't use lack of funding as an excuse to comply with federal law," Curtis said. "They have to provide equal access."

Curtis said the department has not approached the Legislature for funding to bring the prison into compliance.

The law requiring institutions to give the disabled equal access has been on the books for more than 10 years, but some of the most serious problems are in buildings that were constructed after the law went into effect, Curtis said.

"Even the Lone Peak facility built last summer does not have enough handicapped accessible cells, restrooms or drawer space," Curtis said.

A new unit for mentally handicapped prisoners recently opened but the facility is not wheelchair accessible, Curtis said.

The complaint was made to the Justice Department, which could negotiate with Corrections, take the matter to court or do nothing.

Youth's twisted story spurs free speech debate

Associated Press

OTTAWA — A 16-year-old boy expelled from school after he read a threatening story he wrote in class has become a symbol of free expression among Canada's literary community.

The case has attracted national attention, with heavy media coverage focusing on the month the boy spent in jail after he read his story about a bullied teen-ager who plans to blow up his school to his 11th grade classmates.

The teen, who cannot be identified under Canadian law, was released on $6,775 bail on condition he stay off the Internet, only go out with adult supervision and stay at least three miles from his former school.

Of four charges against the youth, only one involves the story he read in class, entitled "Twisted." The other three concern alleged threats he uttered to schoolmates.

Top authors Margaret Atwood ("The Handmaid's Tale"), Michael Ondaatje ("The English Patient") and others have rallied around the youth, appearing Sunday at a forum called "Artists for Freedom of Speech," in a show of support.

Atwood, Ondaatje and others called for vigilance in preventing repression of free speech.

Atwood gave the teen "First Words," a book of childhood writings from authors including Michael Crichton, Gore Vidal, Norman Mailer and John Updike. Inside she wrote "Good luck."

"One thing writers do feel they know how to do is ... they know how to read and they know how to read between the lines," she said. "And reading between the lines of this story is quite another story. I think that is why we are here."

Another student from the youth's school, however, criticized the forum.

"The whole case has been blown out of proportion," said George Bonkowsky, 16, who attended as part of a three-member group calling themselves Voice of Reason. "Everybody's concentrating on the monologue. It should be about the alleged threats he made. They have been misinformed."

Originally, the boy was supposed to read "Twisted" at the gathering, but said he decided not to because of fear "it would inflame the situation."

Ondaatje told the audience of about 250 people that writing enabled him to escape a troubled childhood.

reality of working parents

By CAROL KLEIMAN
Chicago Tribune

She lives close to her work, to day care for her infant daughter and to her elder daughter's school. Her husband attends law school full time.

These are some of the factors that led Dr. Anjali Jain, a pediatrician and instructor at the University of Chicago hospitals, to return to work when each child was almost 3 months old.

"I also have a big commitment to my career," said Dr. Jain, who earned her medical degree in 1992. "I didn't want to give all that up."

The pediatrician, who has been at the University of Chicago since 1998, is nursing her baby, who was born in July. Her older daughter is 5.

"I'm a good mother but I also need the stimulation of my work," said Jain, who says she and her husband, Vivek, have a team approach to child care. "I like being a role model for my daughters, in the sense that they should have choices in life, that all kinds of possibilities are OK for women."

The doctor says the pressure solely on women to be care givers is changing. "When both parents are involved, like we are, the workplace will change to be more conducive to raising children and working — and then society will change," she said.

Societal pressures lag far behind the actuality, however. According to a 1998 study by the U.S. Bureau of the Census, 51 percent of married couples with children were both working. And that same year, 59 percent of women with infants were in the paid labor market.

"I worked up until the day of delivery and was completely conflicted about returning to work," said Louise Felton, a senior vice president at Young & Rubicam San Francisco, a global communications company. Felton, who is married to Brian Brown, an architect, has a 1-year-old son.

Now a partner in Young & Rubicam's new consulting group, y&rbranding, Felton, who has been in advertising for 13 years, returned to work in April when her son was 5 months old.

"I was 34 when my son was born, and all that time I worked very hard at my career — I was proud of it," said the executive. "But once he was born, the bond I felt was immediate and powerful. The thought of being a stay-at-home mother was appealing."

As her leave ended, Felton decided to go back to work on a more flexible schedule.
